Extract of Letter from London, February 7th & 16th.

"THE parliament met on the 10th inst. and in the House of Commons General Conway set forth his grievances in a long speech for the purpose; but services he said had been rewarded by a dismission without trial, or without his being guilty of an offence but that of speaking his sentiments in the house; his sentiment it was true brought him 1500l. a year, but neither that nor any other consideration, nor even the house full of gold, should make him forego that privilege; he then imputed his dismission to Mr. G——v——le, whom he treated with severity, and even attached contempt. Mr. G. answered him in such a manner, as gave satisfaction to the house. To the personal reflections thrown out by Mr. Conway, he said he was not sensible he had acted otherwise than became him to that gentleman, and that if he persisted in thinking so, he would find him ready to answer him in the house, out of the house, or any where. To this Mr. Conway, in his reply, thought proper to say, that his invectives had been pointed against the minister, and that neither he nor the greatest part of the people of England believe Mr. G—— to be such. This only occasioned a laugh—Lord Granby seconded Conway, and spoke what he said had always been his sentiments with respect to dismission of officers without military cause or trial, and said that he thought no officers ought to sit in that house; these however, he only affirmed with much modesty, as the ideas he had for some time formed on that particular matter; much to the disappointment of the minority, who had flattered themselves with the hopes of so great an acquisition.

"Sir William Meredith moved the house, that a day should be appointed for taking up the question relating to general warrants, which was left undetermined last session, and to the surprise of every body was seconded by Sir Fletcher Norton, the Attorney General, who declared he wished for nothing more than to have that matter debated and determined by parliament, and accordingly a day was appointed, which shewed that the ministry were not at all apprehensive of their opponents, and it also shewed they had no intention to keep off the decision of any question where the liberty of the subject is concerned. When the appointed day arrived, tho' the opposition mustered their whole force, and many who had voted with the ministry on other points joined them, yet they left the question, and the matters left to the courts of law: A determination which must afford sincere pleasure to every true friend of his country and her excellent laws, who wishes to see them transmitted to posterity; to every man who wishes the liberty of the subject may never stand on such a foundation as when the House of Lords was voted useless, and the English constitution became extinct.

"Several publications from North-America have lately made their appearance here, in which the independency of the colonies is asserted in pretty round terms. I shall not say how far such performances may be conclusive in their reasonings: It does not appear, however, that they will at this juncture be of any great service to the places where they first saw the light, though perhaps they may be specimens of the profound erudition of the authors. Some scruple not to affirm, that sentiments like these, expressed with impunity by individuals, and in some measure supported by legislative proceedings, will oblige government here to think of steps that may check such haughty republican spirits. The real friends of North-America see those publications with pain, while some others view them with pleasure. It is suggested that the authors have done the colonies more disservice than their inhabitants can repair in a century: And it has been said publickly, — "They pretend to assimilate themselves to the most august representative body in the world, and "forgetting at one instant the royal hand which gave them what "they enjoy, at the next insist on what it never did nor could give, "an exemption from the power of parliament." It is certain that American affairs will be more closely attended to than heretofore; a measure than which none can be more agreeable to the people of England, who have long beheld the difference between the taxes they are obliged to pay and those paid in America, not considering perhaps sufficiently the superior advantages themselves enjoy in many other respects. It is confidently said, that such necessary and beneficial laws as the Americans do not pass, will be enacted for them, those of another sort repealed without mercy, the government supported, public officers paid, popular appointments annulled, and all this very soon, now that war is over, opposition in the dust, profusion at an end, and the different ministers labour to distinguish themselves in their several departments.

"The consideration of imposing a stamp-duty in America, postponed last session that the sense of the colonies thereon might be known, has just been resumed, and a bill ordered to be brought in for imposing the said duty. Two of the colony agents only had any authority from their constituents to offer an equivalent to be raised by the colonies themselves; the others being instructed to appose the bill by presenting petitions from their assemblies, &c. some whereof were conceived in such terms as rendered it impracticable to present them; the committee of the whole house divided 245 against 49, and the resolutions were agreed to in the house without a division, yet we still hope for some mitigation before the bill passes into a law. A late pamphlet has the following paragraph;— "Should the "doctrine be adopted that, because the colonies have no repre"sentatives, they ought not to be taxed by parliament, might not "Leeds, Halifax, Birmingham, Sheffield, that part of the dutchy "of Lancaster, which lies at the very gates of the Royal-Palace, "and many other places of great opulence, with equal justice say, "that they are not bound to pay any taxes imposed by a British "parliament, because they have no representative in that body?— A question to which many would be glad to see a satisfactory answer."

Extract of a Letter from London, dated February 16, 1765.

General C——y said in the house, "The last session of parliament we came to a resolution, that it might be proper to tax the Americans; at that time it was thrown out, I am sure I understood it so, that the intention of this resolution was, to give to the Americans time to represent their inability, or to suggest the propriety of a less burthensome tax than the Stamp-Duty: This time has been given; the representations are come from the colonies; and shall we shut our ears against that information, which, with an affection of candour, we allotted sufficient time to reach us? For my own part, I must declare myself just as much in the dark as I was the last year; my way of life does not engage me in intercourse with commercial gentlemen, or those who have any knowledge of the colonies; I declare, upon my honour, I expected, as a member sitting in this house, to receive such information as, in consequence of the notice given, might be transmitted by the councils, by which my judgment might be directed, my conduct regulated.—In a question so important, which regards two millions of unrepresented people, I lay aside every consideration of party, and shall therefore make no scruple to declare my opinion, that the Jamaica petition is not admissible, because it does not come from the colony, and of course cannot contain those lights, which I am sure, I am desirous of receiving, and which the colonists themselves can only give. But there are, I am informed, other petitions of the nature which I describe, that I am for receiving. A great deal has been said of the standing and established rule of this house, that no petitions can be received against money bills. What is this rule? I recollect no order, no resolution occurs to me; and it appears undeniable, from what has been advanced on both sides, that the practice is by no means invariable; at best, it is but a practice of convenience; a practice which in this instance, if in no other, we ought to vary from: For from whom unless from themselves, are we to learn the circumstances of the colonies, and the fatal consequences that may attend the imposing of this tax; I speak this with great deference to the abilities of the very few agents who sit in parliament; some of the colonies have not this advantage, and none of them, let gentlemen say what they please, are represented in parliament. They can't be serious, when they insist even on their being virtually represented: Will any man in this house get up and say, he is one of the representatives of the colonies? When, so far from being an object of their choice, the most sensible men in the colonies scarce know such a gentleman exists. One gentleman, in the course of this debate, (G. Elliot) has observed, that the commons have maintained and asserted their right against the crown, and against the Lords, of solely voting money without the controul of either, any otherwise than by a negative: And will you suffer your colonies to be reached, to attack those rights, to impede the exercise of them, untouched, as they now are, by the other branches of the legislature. This I consider appears to me the strongest argument I ever heard: Can [illegible] abolish acknowledgment of your right, a more decisive denial of your power than a positive, haughty refusal, submitting their cause to your wisdom and justice, and praying to be heard before your final, against a tax that will affect them in their tenderest parts, in their privileges, that at least you have suffered, and in their property, acquired by your protection. I am desirous, from a principle of duty, policy and justice, for receiving the petition of a numerous, useful, opulent people, from whom this country derives its greatest commerce, strength, and consideration."

Of all the speeches I ever heard in my life, Mr. Yorke's was the ablest; but it is impossible for me, without dishonouring him, to give it you: It was composed of history, law, oratory, and argument. He answered all the speakers against the bill; gave reasons for the practice of refusing petitions, and why it did not obtain earlier, because the crown formerly had a revenue of its own. He explained the constitution of the colonies, which he said he had much considered, and the more he considered them, the more exact he saw the resemblance they bore to corporations and corporations only; that the power of legislation given them, was that of making by-laws for their own provincial purposes, subject as well to parliamentary as royal controul. That it was absurd, to suppose that a body of adventurers could carry the legislative power of Great-Britain along with them; that he was sure the charters could convey no such power, for the very best reason in the world, because the prerogative could not grant it. He called the charters of the two proprietary governments, the King's standing commissions, and the proprietaries, his hereditary governors: In short, from the opinion of the most sensible unbiassed members of parliament, I am induced to think it one of the best speeches ever made there. The bill was read the first time without a syllable being said, nor do I expect any more will. I think matters have been ill managed. There has not been so much opposition as to a common Turnpike-bill.

Extract of a Letter from LONDON.

"Mr. Charles Townshend having spoke in favour of the Stamp Bill, and concluding his speech by saying to the following effect, ——'Those Children of our own planting, (speaking of the Americans) nourished by our own indulgence, until they are grown to a good degree of strength and opulence, and protected by our own arms, will they grudge to contribute their mite to relieve us from the heavy load of national expence which we lie under."—Mr. Barré arose, and with eyes darting fire, and with an out stretched arm, spoke as follows, with a voice somewhat elevated, and with sternness in his countenance which expressed in a most lively manner the feelings of his heart;—viz.

"Children planted by your care? No! Your oppression planted them in America; they fled from your tyranny, into a then uncultivated land, where they were exposed to almost all the hardships to which human nature is liable; and among others, to the savage cruelty of the enemy of the country; a people the most subtile, and I take upon me to say, the most truly terrible of any people that ever inhabited any part of GOD'S EARTH; and yet, actuated by principles of true English liberty, they met all these hardships with pleasure, compared with these they suffered in their own country from the hands of those that should have been their friends.

"They nourished up by your Indulgence? They grew by your neglect of them. As soon as you began to care about them, that care was exercised in sending persons to rule over them, in one department and another; who were, perhaps, the deputies of some deputy, of members of this house, sent to spy out their liberty, to misrepresent their actions, and to prey upon them: Men, whose behaviour, on many occasions, has caused the blood of those sons of LIBERTY, to recoil within them: Men promoted to the highest seats of justice, some to my knowledge, were glad by going to foreign countries, to escape being bro't to a bar of justice in their own.

"They protected by your arms? They have nobly taken up arms in your defence, they exerted their valour, amidst their constant and laborious industry, for the defence of a country whose frontiers, while drench'd in blood, its interior parts have yeilded all its little savings to your enlargement: And BELIEVE ME, REMEMBER I THIS DAY TOLD YOU SO, That the same spirit which actuated that people at first, will continue with them still: But prudence forbids me to explain myself any further. GOD KNOWS, I do not at this time speak from motives of party heat. However superior to me in general knowledge and experience, the respectable body of this house may be, yet I claim to know more of America than most of you, having seen and been conversant in that country. The people there are as truly loyal, I believe, as any subjects the King has: But a people jealous of their liberties, and who will vindicate them, if they should be violated; but the subject is too delicate, I will say no more."

RAN away from the subscriber, the 13th instant, a stout, able, well-made negro man, about five feet eight inches high, with a surly down look; was formerly the property of Mr. Deas, and lately of the Rev. Mr. Wilton, when he was well known about town (as a porter) by the name of LEITH, but is now called SCIPIO: While the property of Mr. Deas, he ran away and called himself Isaac, but was taken and confined in Savannah-Jail half a year. He had on when he went away a blue cloth jacket, faced and collar'd with red; but carried off a new purple mixed cloth waistcoat, trimmed with gold vellum button-holes, and gilt buttons, a pair of old leather breeches, and a pair of black, so that it is probable he may change his dress. As he may change his name, and (pretencing to be free) attempt to get off the province, all masters of vessels and others are hereby forwarned against carrying away; as are all other persons whosoever, against harbouring or employing him, on pain of being prosecuted with the utmost rigour.—Whoever takes up and delivers him to the warden of the work-house, or to me in Charles-Town, shall have a reward of Twenty Pounds.

ARTHUR NEES.

The said run away has been twice taken since his elopement, once at a dance up the Path, and since at some forty miles Combahee, and made his escape: He had on each time the mixed cloth waistcoat. 'Tis suspected that he is gone towards George-

That Sir William Burnaby was gone for Jamaica, but had left the Prince Edward at Pensacola, and sent the Alarm upon a survey of the Bay of Spiritu Santo.
